

ICY PAVEMENT IS CAUSE OF CRASH

3 Cars Involved In Accident Near Marley; One Man Badly Hurt

The curve on the Southwest Highway near the Marley school was the scene of a serious automobile accident Sunday night in which three automobiles were involved and a man was quite badly injured.

During the day some snow along the pavement had thawed and the water ran over the pavement and by night froze, leaving a very slippery spot. A car from Iowa driven by M. H. Donald Winbiger, 29 years old of 55 Olive Court, Iowa City, Iowa skidded and landed in front of a car being driven by A. H. Simms, 49 years old of 72 West Adams Street, Chicago. Winbiger sustained severe lacerations of the face and was taken to the Silver Cross hospital, Joliet. Simms was uninjured.

A third car with six persons in it, driven by a Chicago man approached immediately after the crash and in trying to avoid smashing into the wrecked car, he applied the brakes with the result that his car spun around six times and was brought to a stop in a field. The occupants of the car were badly shaken up and frightened. The only damage done to this car was a tire torn off the rim. The first two cars were badly damaged.

Non-Firemen Can Not Drive Tinley Fire Dept. Truck

One evening last week a small truck in the south subdivision of Tinley Park caught fire. The fire siren sounded, but before the firemen got to the village hall they saw the fire truck going full speed to the scene of the fire. The fire was out by the time the truck arrived. The firemen were puzzled as to who of the firemen had responded and James English, the official driver, was at a loss to understand why the truck did not stop to pick him up as he was near by when the truck pulled out.

At the meeting of the Fire Department Tuesday night it was reported that two young men who are not members of the fire department had taken it upon themselves to play firemen. The officers of the fire department are much incensed over this and want it plainly understood that no one not a member of the fire department is allowed to drive the fire truck and if non-members do not heed the fire department's warning, drastic steps will be taken to enforce the ruling.

Overheated Stove Causes Disasterous Fire; One Hurt

The Mokena Fire Dept., had two calls within a week. Last Friday afternoon they were called to the Wm. Bernard farm near Mokena where a corn crib had been set afire when a tractor backfired, throwing burning gasoline against the building. The fire was extinguished before the firemen arrived.

Wednesday morning about 11 o'clock the fire department was called to fight a fire on the old Duncan farm south of Mokena. A small one room building used for sleeping quarters by two young men working on the premises, caught fire supposedly from an overheated stove. One of the boys had gone to Homewood the other remaining on the place now owned by Sandy Williams. The young man suddenly saw smoke pouring out of the little building. Mrs. Williams put in a call for the Mokena Fire Department and thru some misunderstanding was told the fire department did not make calls out of the village. She then called the Frankfort Fire Department and was told they did not respond to fires out side of their territory. Mrs. Williams then called the Mokena Fire Department again and this time contacted a different party and was told the fire truck would respond at once. Fire Chief Herman Schweser and his men arrived quickly and after a stubborn fight put the fire out. The building was completely ruined. Bedding, clothes and some money was destroyed by the blaze. In attempting to save the bedding and clothing the young man who discovered the blaze, cut his hand quite badly and was given medical attention.

Mr. Williams, the new owner of the former Duncan homestead, is a linotype operator on the Chicago Tribune. He is remodeling the entire place and making a beauty spot of it.

Mokena Dispenses With Police Chief As An Economy Measure

The Mokena village board has concurred with Mayor Harry Mall that Mokena does not need a police officer for the winter months and deemed it an economy measure to get along without police service.

At the meeting of the village board Tuesday night, the board decided to dispense with the services of George Bennett as police chief and so voted.

Officer Bennett has had a stormy career since he has been on the force. While engaged in making arrests of autoists who failed to stop for the Wolf road intersection in the village with Front street, he made one arrest which caused much difficulty and which has not come to trial.

Whether the village board will re-hire Mr. Bennett later on has not been decided as yet.

ORLAND MAN FINDS BODIES OF MURDER VICTIMS

Everett Heatherwich of Orland while returning home from work at 8:30 a. m. last Friday noticed a car parked along side the highway at 104th and McCarthy road in Palos Township. There was something suspicious about the car and he stopped to investigate.

Upon opening the car door he was almost overcome by fumes of carbon monoxide which filled the interior of the enclosed car. The motor was still running and in the front seat he discovered the bodies of two women and a man.

The women had been dead for sometime evidently, as the bodies were cold. The man was still breathing, but died shortly afterward. Mr. Heatherwich telephoned from the nearest gas station to Constable John Helenhouse of Orland asking him what to do. Mr. Helenhouse told him to remain on the scene and he would get word to the state highway police. Just about that time the state highway police officer came into town and constable Helenhouse told him what had occurred. He immediately proceeded to the scene.

They found a love note on one of the women. On the outside of the car, lying on the ground, was a loaded revolver. On close examination it was found that a hose attached to the exhaust pipe of the car which entered the tonneau thru the trunk of the car had filled the interior with carbon monoxide fumes.

The police authorities feel that all three had been drinking heavily and the man, who later was found to be one Fred Miller, aged 37, employed by the Brinks Express Co., was tangled up in a love affair.

It is presumed he murdered the two women and then committed suicide.

After the bodies were identified it was discovered that the women were Mrs. Hazel Lefler, 23, a divorcee of 866 Irving Park Ave., and Miss Lorraine McNichols 19, of 7543 Parnell Ave., a close friend of Mrs. Lefler but apparently a rival for Miller's love.

The first theory of police had been that a triple suicide pact had been carried out, but the coroner's jury, returned their finding of murder after the testimony of Mrs. Virginia Mills, mother of Mrs. Lefler. She testified that Miller had begged Mrs. Lefler to marry him though he was already married and had threatened her.

Mrs. Violet McNichols, mother of Lorraine, testified that her daughter and Mrs. Lefler were close friends and she believed that she was asked by Mrs. Lefler to go along in the automobile for protection against Miller of whom Mrs. Lefler was afraid.

Police however, seemed convinced that there also had been a love affair between Miller and Lorraine. A letter, in the girl's handwriting found in Miller's coat, proclaimed that, "I love you and I am not ashamed of it, nor ever will be." The finding of Miller's pistol, which had not been discharged, lying in the road in the rear of the machine, gave rise to the opinion that Miller had intended to shoot the women but lost nerve and used the gas route instead.

The bodies of the three, were taken to an undertaking establishment in Blue Island.

"You bear a very good name. And I'm sure you are proud of it. Parish remembers Usage—which was your home. His sister was your mother's maid, and when your mother died she stayed on till the house was sold. It should not have been sold, of course; but your father was killed in action, and, as you know, things went wrong. Very well. Now I, too, bear a good name. My family name is Saying; and, though you and I know better, the Almanach de Gotha will tell you that it is royal. And if you will change your name—it's easy enough, by deed-poll—and will call yourself Saying-Exon from this time on, I think you may very well marry the Countess of Brief. Apart from anything else, it is, as the three of us know, most right and proper that she should bear my name; and in view of all that has happened, it is most right and proper that she should take it from you. But the principal thing is this—that I am very fond of you, Richard, and should derive infinite pleasure from the thought that you and your sons were to bear my name, for I know you will do it honor and I find it hard to believe that, with such a mother to bear them, your sons will prove unworthy to hand it down."

She hesitated there and put a hand to her eyes. Then she went slowly on.

"The workings of Fate are very wonderful. Saying is my own name. When I was married, I took my husband's title, but not his name. And because the name is royal, his sons by me would have borne it . . . But, you see, I have had no children . . . And when I come to die, the name will die, too . . . unless you—you care to humor . . . a sentimental old fool . . ."

What I said I cannot remember, because my heart was too full: but I know I was down on my knees and her hands were in mine, as I tried my best to thank her for doing to me what only a king can do.

Then she kissed me on either cheek and told me to ring for wine, "for we must have a drink," she said, "to celebrate this occasion. You seem to like the idea, and, as good John Herrick would say, it suits me down to the socks. The thought of that name going out has given me sleepless nights. But now . . . all's very well, for if you and Elizabeth Virgil aren't fit to fly my flag, then my eye is dim and my natural force abated. And that I refuse to believe, for I never wore glasses yet and, though I take it easy, I'm still as strong as a horse."

When the wine was brought, she pledged me and wished me luck, and I tried again to thank her and drank her health. Then she picked up a sheet of paper and put it into my hand.

"Your cake," she said simply.

"You can have it now—and can eat it, as soon as you've changed your name."

A marriage has been arranged and will shortly take place between Richard Saying-Exon, late of Usage in Wiltshire and now of Tracery in Austria, and Elizabeth Virgil, Countess of Brief.

I lifted my head, to stare at the Duchess of Whelp.

"Now of Tracery, madam?" said Old Harry. "You can cut it out, if you like. But I understand you're short of a residence, and it would give me great pleasure, if you were to make this your home."

After lunch I left for Raven, where I was to stay for three nights, after which I was to return—with the Countess of Brief and Herrick, to settle future arrangements and, generally, "chew the cud." But, before I went, Old Harry made me promise that I would drive straight to Raven and would not visit Brief until the following day.

"You owe John Herrick something. He's been a good friend to you, and he mustn't feel left."

In view of all that had happened, I could not protest: but I could not help thinking that Herrick could hardly "feel left" if I paid my lady a visit before returning to Raven to spend the evening with him. Still, if Old Harry was willful, I owed her caprice so much that if she had seen fit to direct that the Countess and I should not meet for another ten days, I must have honored her precept without a word.

So I took my leave and entered the Rolls once more and, driving leisurely, came to Raven at six.

As we stole between the two chestnuts and on to the apron beyond, I saw that Brenda was standing at the foot of the steps. She must have seen the car coming, along the road of approach.

I brought the Rolls to her side and put out my hand.

"Well, Brenda," I said, "how are you? You see, I've come back."

She took my hand in both hers.

"I am so glad to see you," she said. "Your room is all ready, of course. Mr. Herrick is not back yet. He goes to Brief every day and I doubt if he will be here for another half hour. I think you will sit in the meadows, until he comes."

"You're perfectly right," said I, and got out of the car. "But, first, I must have a drink. Will you go and draw me some beer, while I'm washing my hands?"

Brenda hesitated. Then—

"You—you won't have a bath, will you? I mean, the water's not hot."

In some surprise—

"I'd like one before dinner," I said. "But why mustn't I have one now?"

"It would take too long," said Brenda. "The meadows are now at their best, but the sun is low."

With that, she was gone.

I turned to my faithful man.

"Glad to be back, Winter?"

He smiled all over his face.

"This is the place for me, sir. Them 'igh an' mighty 'ouses is all very well in their way, but the country seems frightened of them."

For two or three moments she held my head against hers. Then she let it go and turned to look into my eyes.

"My blessed," she breathed, "I'm so thankful I mean so much. You see, I've given you all. I've no more to give. Heart and soul and body—you hold them in your strong hands. They're not mine any more. They're . . . at your disposal, Richard. And if ever you ceased to

. . . You see, you are my dream. A week ago I rendered you unto Caesar—and tore my heart. And now Caesar has given you back—has given me back my dream. Well, that's all right; but the wound in my heart will reopen if ever I leave you again. And that, I tell you frankly, I cannot face. When I left you, I knew very well I was leaving my life behind. But not until I was gone did I know what it meant to be dead—a dead man having his being amid a workaday world."

For two or three moments she held my head against hers. Then she let it go and turned to look into my eyes.

"My blessed," she breathed, "I'm so thankful I mean so much. You see, I've given you all. I've no more to give. Heart and soul and body—you hold them in your strong hands. They're not mine any more. They're . . . at your disposal, Richard. And if ever you ceased to was sitting, smoking, with Herrick, under the stars.

Raven was fast asleep: only our sitting-room casements were framing two squares of light: the Rolls was within her coach-house: Winter had gone to his rest.

"I suppose it's all true," said Herrick: "but I must confess there are moments when I wonder if I've been translated before my time. I mean, a month ago I was not only down but out. The immediate future was hideous. Pawn-shop, doss-house and gutter were staring me in the face, and I didn't like the look in their eyes—you see, I'd met them before . . ."

And now I'm ruling a castle, with 50 servants hanging upon my lips. Compared with me, Elizabeth doesn't count. I'm a sort of Lord Protector, appointed by the Duchess of Whelp. And when that's done, I'm due at Tracery. I have been desired by Old Harry to take her estate in hand. 'Put my house in order,' she said. 'You're just the man to do it, and it's time it was done. If my agent's right, that'll just about carry you home. He gives you uncle six months . . .'

So you see, my gay crusader, you've made my fortune, too—to say nothing at all of the fact that I've never enjoyed myself as I have in the last three weeks.

"Three weeks and one day—no more. Yet their burden has been so brilliant that, though I've seen quite a lot, the rest of my life beside them seems strangely dull. And that's not really strange, for never before have I entered the Middle Ages and tasted their mighty fare. Talk about food for the gods . . ."

"Our first view of Brief, gray against green in the sunshine, as we stood on the bridge that trembled before the Vials of Wrath: Percy Virgil, afraid to writhe, whilst I drew his description from life for the eager police: Elizabeth here at Raven—Rosalind, Viola, Beatrice, rolled into one, with the secret of all the ages snared in her glorious eyes: the dead king, sunk in his stall, staring before him as he had stared before him, day and night, for almost 500 years: dinner for four at Tracery—gold and silver and scarlet and powdered hair, Elizabeth worshipping and the Duchess of Whelp's most excellent majesty: Percy Virgil confronted with Winter . . . 'the Count' of Brief at bay, and the awful uncertainty flaming in Bertram's eyes: and then, one evening at five, the stammer of a telephone-bell and Old Harry's voice rock-steady and very clear . . . 'Is that you, Henderson? Yes? . . . 'Stopped and returning tomorrow.' 'I'm much obliged.' . . ."

"And you can add to that list—some very monstrous moments . . . Elsa's laugh in the staircase-turret . . . the darkness of Palfrey's court . . . the shock of that icy water . . . the straws you caught at to save your tottering life . . . and then Lord Ferdinand Virgil, broken and craven and cringing to be permitted to bury himself alive—I shall never get over that as long as I live. You're a blasted lion in sheep's clothing, and that's the truth. You sit there, as meek as mild and apparently dumb with admiration for Old Harry's efforts and mine to kick at the gates, and the next day, before we're up, you walk bung into the fortress and kill the giant. Then you put on the sheep's skin again . . . When I think that you came into breakfast straight from the field—and merely begged my pardon for being late . . ."

As though overcome with emotion, he threw himself back in his chair and covered his eyes.

"I'm sorry," I said. "It seemed better—"

(TO BE CONTINUED)

"I Think You May Very Well Marry the Countess of Brief."

The woods and the meadows seem shy. But here they'll come right up—an' eat out of your hand."

"You've said it," said I. "And take it easy tonight. Wash the Rolls tomorrow."

"I'd rather do her tonight, sir. I won't take me very long, an' when you come to think, she deserves the best."

And that was another true saying. "Do as you like," said I, and walked into the house.

I do not know what made me do it, but when I had washed my hands I strolled across the landing and entered the pleasant bedroom I knew was mine.

For a moment I stood looking round. Then I moved to the open windows, commanding the friendly meadows and the sheltering woods beyond.

The scene was as rare as lovely, for the sun was going down and the pleasant Georgic was flooded with amber light. All things were throwing shadows as clean and as black as print, slashing the turf with sable and making the vivid green more vivid still. On every side the tapestry of woodland was shot with gold, the stream was afire with splendor . . . and sitting beside its water was Elizabeth, Countess of Brief.

Her beautiful head was bare and her eyes were fixed upon the trees—as though she were expecting the heaven above to open and make her rich: but for me the heaven had opened . . . and I seemed to be regarding some idyll that did not belong to earth, but had been sung by Shakespeare to please the gods.

So I looked upon my fortune.

Then I went down to the meadows, to see the light in her eyes.

Nearly an hour went by before Herrick arrived—for which I was very thankful, because his car was to take Elizabeth back.

As we heard the drone of his engine—

"Oh dear," said the Countess of Brief. "Now that I've got you back, I don't want to let you go. But you won't go mad again, will you? Remember that the Duchess of Whelp has set her heart on this match, and that, after all that she's done, you can't let her down."

With a sudden movement, I picked her up in my arms.

"Shall I tell you something?" I said.

"Yes, please."

A warm arm slid round my neck.

"Today I came back to my dream: and as long as my dream will have me, I shall never leave it again. I must go to London later, if only to change my name. But I will not go, unless you go with me. Take what companion you like. Take half a dozen women—to shut Propriety's mouth. Kick your heels, while I'm doing my business. Only, be there care, the body would wither, for the heart and the soul would die."

I would have answered her, but the words would not come, for I could think of nothing but the look in her glorious eyes. I cannot tell what exquisite language she spoke, but I understood their saying better than any words. I had that been ennobled by the Duchess of Whelp; but now I was exalted in spirit, and a spring seemed to break within me for joy that Elizabeth Virgil had come to love me so well.

Then she smiled, and I kissed her mouth and set her down on her feet.

"Shall I tell you something?" she said.

"Yes, please."

"When we got the telephone-message to say that you had been stopped and were going to come back, I—I burst into tears."

"My sweet!"

"It was natural enough. But listen. Old Harry called me a fool—and then burst into tears herself. We turned to John for comfort—John who had been our mainstay and simply kept us going for 31 hours . . . and John was standing there, with the tears running down his cheeks. So you see, my darling, I'm not—peculiar. There's something about Richard Exon that gets us all under the ribs."

Which was, of course, absurd, for else I should not have suffered in Red Lead Lane.

Four hours had gone by, and I

Race of Monkey-Men With Tails Found To Inhabit a Wild District in Papua

Is man descended from monkeys? Scientists say "yes" but have still to prove it. They are still searching for the "missing link." They are looking for it among old bones, says a writer in Pearson's London Weekly.

But all the time it may be that the "missing link" is alive and kicking. In fact, the missing link may not be an old bone but a live monkey-man—and not merely one but a whole tribe of them.

A race of men with tails is reported to inhabit a wild district in Papua, and evidence of their existence has been given by a native from the Fly River area, according to the annual report of the lieutenant-governor of Papua, Sir Hubert Murray.

The native was emphatic that tailed men were to be found somewhere to the east of the Kemp Welch. He was pressed to give more details, and said he was confident that at least one of these persons had a tail. When asked why he was so positive, he replied: "Because I ate him."

Several years ago, Sir Hubert Murray recalls, he met a much-traveled man who claimed to have met a tribe of tailed men along the Fly river.

They lived in houses raised on piles, and in the floors of the dwellings holes were cut for each person through which his tail hung when he sat or lay down.

On one occasion, this man said, he crept along the house, gently tied a knot in each tail, and then raised the alarm that a hostile force was approaching. The tailed men sprang to their feet, but the knots caught in the holes and they were flung to the ground.

It was, the man added, a joke that could only be played once.

PETER COMMENDED AND REBUKED

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 16:13-25.
GOLDEN TEXT—Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.—Matthew 16:16.

"What think ye of Christ?" This question, which was asked by Jesus Himself (Matt. 22: 42), is the touchstone that tries men, and churches, organizations, and movements. The answer to it determines character, condition, and destiny. As we study the life of Peter and see how he responded to the question of Jesus, let us not fail to apply the truth to ourselves and to those to whom we minister. This is indeed I. A Crucial Question (vv. 13-16).

With His crucifixion now only six months away our Lord in preparation for it is about to make a more definite claim to Messiahship, and thus to establish the truth in the minds of His disciples. He therefore asks this all-important question about Himself.

First, it is a general query, "Whom do men say that I am?" The answer (v. 14) indicates that the common opinion concerning Christ was a very high one. He had made an impression on the people of His time, and this has been true down through the ages. Even those who do not believe on Him admit that He was "the ideal representative and guide to humanity," or the person before whom "everyone would kneel." But beautiful tributes to His character and leadership are worse than meaningless unless they lead to a personal confession of Him as Lord and Saviour.

The question becomes personal as He asks, "Whom do ye say that I am?" That question no one can escape. We cannot refuse to answer. Neutrality is impossible. Whatever we do or say, or do not do or say, is a decision.

Peter's answer is really the sum and substance of Christian doctrine. He recognized Him as the Messiah, the fulfillment of all Hebrew prophecy, and as the Son of the Living God, the Redeemer and Savior of men, the One in whom centers all Christian faith.

II. A Divine Revelation (vv. 17-20). Peter had been ready to be taught by the Holy Spirit, and therefore made a confession of Christ which was not conceived in the mind of a man but was a conviction born of the Spirit of God (cf. I Cor. 12:3).

Upon Peter's confession, which was thus really a divine revelation of the person and work of Christ, the Church is established, Christ Himself being the chief cornerstone (I Pet. 2:7) with Peter himself as one of the apostles built into its very foundation (Eph. 2:20).

Note that Christ calls it "my church." It is His Body, and He as the Head rules over it. The gates of Hades, that is, the wicked powers of the unseen world, while they now seemingly have great power against the Church, shall not ultimately prevail. We have a victorious Christ.

III. The Shadow of the Cross (vv. 21-25).

The cross of Christ casts its shadow over the little group as Jesus begins to show to His disciples (v. 21) what He is to suffer as the Saviour of the world. The city of Jerusalem exalted to heaven by its opportunities and privileges is to be the place where He is to be nailed to the tree. "Where roses ought to bloom, sin has often planted thorns." Peter in an outburst of affectionate folly tries to hinder Christ from going to the cross, and becomes for the moment the servant of Satan. He "meant well," but it is not enough to have good intentions.

The cross of Christ calls for the cross of the Christian (v. 24). Note well that this does not refer to little acts of so-called "self-denial," but rather to the denial of self. It means that self-will is set aside and God's will becomes paramount in the life (v. 24). It means the abandonment of selfish motives and desires, the losing of life for Christ's sake. Thus only do we find the real fulfillment of life (v. 25).

For God to Decide There are those who say, and that continually, that life is too short. That depends. What are you doing with it? For some things it is; for others it is not. In any case, it is not for us to make any declaration on that point. God knows whether it is, or is not, too short. And it is safe to leave that matter with Him. —Christian Conservator.

Designs for Indoor and Outdoor Wear

ONE of these designs gives you four gay little extras to freshen up your dark dresses and suits—an accessory set comprising a fitted jacket, a soft, roomy bag, a tailored ascot scarf and a pair of those new boxy-figured gloves. The other is a practical house dress, so comfortable and so good-looking that you'll want it for shopping and runabout as well as for home work. Make the frivolous accessory set—make the useful house dress! Both are easy, and you'll enjoy them both!

Four Matching Accessories. It will make your clothes seem like lots more, if you vary them with bright accessories in just the colors you want. Don't be afraid to tackle the gloves. They're easy, with the detailed sew chart included in your pattern and so smart! Lots of women who haven't sewed any more than you have are making their own, with this design. Choose flannel, jersey, or suede.

Slenderizing House Dress. This is such a trim, tailored style, with darts at the waistline for slimmness, and a gathered bodice to give fullness over the bust. The skirt has an action pleat for greater comfort. The plain V neckline, finished with edging, is very becoming. All in all, this dress fits so well and looks so well that you should have it in flat crepe or polka dot print as well as in tubfast cottons like calico, percale, gingham and linen.

The Patterns. No. 1652 is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52. With long sleeves, size 38 requires 4 3/4 yards of 35-inch material; with short sleeves, 4 1/4 yards; 2 1/4 yards of edging.

No. 1643 is designed for sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 40 and 42. Size 16 requires 1 1/2 yards of 54-inch fabric for the jacket; 1/2 yard for the gloves, with 1/4 yard contrast; 1 1/4 yards for the scarf and 1/2 yard for the bag.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

Have You Planned An Increase In Your Advertising Quota?

Now that we have given the old year the boot, it is logical for your community paper to ask the local business men if they will be ready for the greater opportunities that 1939 will afford. Learned economists are almost unanimous in opinion that 1939 will see considerable improvement in retail trade, many conceding a gain of 20 per cent will be registered. The benefits derived by individual business men will be in direct proportion to their allocations for advertising and the medium chosen for the expenditures. We believe you should plan a schedule, starting with January, which would include a display adv. in each week. Of course your advs. should vary with different seasons, but it's important not to miss an edition. Then—as 1940 looms ahead—get your figures on your gross business and your advertising expenditure. You'll be surprised.

At this juncture we pause to call attention to a unique situation in connection with this paper. The publisher and every member of the force have spent all their lives, with only minor exceptions of short periods of time, in newspaper work. With greater support from a wider range of business men it is within our power to make your community newspaper an even better publication.

One important problem for the business man is to convince his neighbor he has the needed merchandise and is selling it at a reasonable price which can be done only when turnover is rapid. It is impossible to reduce trading done by local people in such cities as Joliet, Blue Island and Chicago. There is a surprising amount of merchandise purchased at these and other places that could have been obtained at home, if the people had known local merchants had the goods. How many times has a customer expressed surprise at finding some wanted article in your store and said, "I didn't know you carried that."

Many enterprises are started with poor conceptions of advertising. The new owner or manager places an advertisement or two in the paper.
Then he drops out, feeling he has announced the venture and expecting people to come rushing to his place of business. Or he will mail out circulars and mimeographed handbills paying a cent apiece for mailing them. He feels he is saving on his advertising in the paper, but the fact of the matter few such circulars get but scant attention if they do get by the front door. Most ventures of this type, if not supported by ample financial backing, go out of business in a short time. The intelligent business man will buy a small amount of newspaper space each week and increase his allowance for advertising as his business volume increases.

Many reputable firms allow four or five per cent of their gross income for the advertising budget.

Our circulation has showed a decided increase during the past year and this means this paper is going ahead.
Mr. Businessman if you want more business in 1939 it means you should use the medium which goes into the homes to carry your advertising message.

TINLEY PARK

Mrs. Hilda Kampe was pleasantly surprised with a cheery "Happy New Year" from the Sunshine 4-H Club, play cast and friends last Friday nite at her home.

The girls presented her with a musical powder box in appreciation of her leadership during the past year and a lovely poem written by Mrs. Stuckey was read. After this, various games were played after which a delicious lunch was served by the girls. During the evening plans were made for a Valentine party to be held in Steinborn's (??).

Marion wondered why she was always picked on, maybe the mistletoe had something to do with it. Everybody learned how to keep house and a certain Fritz couldn't remember he had chosen a wife. Bernilda's knees got plenty sore when no one would smile, not even the boy friend would crack even a small one for her. Mary was favored in one game, since they all wanted her rocker while Laura rocked to and fro unmolested in hers. Someone got herself into trouble when she had to propose in a forfeit game and the gentleman said "yes." Artie was stuck up for a moment with gum on his trousers.
Wonder why Clara was always out of a partner while playing "wink."
Dick was a grand postmaster. He had to take unjust punishment for Elmer's dirty work. Hilda was played when she got an air mail letter wonder why Gig's put the lights out when he stamped it. George only got a newspaper but he fooled 'em when he had two lunch partners.
Alvin was a mere pickle in the fruit basket. Helen constantly upset to Pearl's disgust. Johnny most of all enjoyed the grand floor show given by Norman with Toot's assistance which ended the party. In appreciation for his entertainment he was presented with a miscellaneous collection in a pot which he wouldn't accept so Dorothy put hat and all its contents on the owners head.

When Wally finally persuaded his chauffeur to go they all left feeling the evening was well spent. Erwin thought so too until next day, when he was on the sick list.

Geo. Schantz, who has been seriously ill in his home, was to have been removed to a Chicago hospital
Thursday of this week.

Ray Mager who recently underwent an operation at the Harvey hospital was expected home this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Funk and Wilbert Funk left for Hot Springs, Ark.
Wednesday morning of this week making the trip by auto.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Hopman will leave January 14 for Florida where they will remain for the month.

The Tinley Park village board will hold their regular monthly meeting next Wednesday evening.

A very large crowd attended the roller skating at Saenger hall on New Year's eve.

The Volunteer Fire department held their meeting Tuesday evening.

The Tinley Park camp of Royal Neighbors will install their newly elected officers the evening of Jan.
24.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Mancke and Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Schoeneck entertained guests New Year's Eve.

A number of families joined in a progressive dinner New Year's Eve.
Part of a meal was enjoyed in each home visited.

A pinocle tournament will be held each Tuesday evening at the Saenger hall commencing next Tuesday night, January 10 at 8 p.m.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES
"GOD" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, January 1.

The Golden Text was, "Thus saith the Lord the King of Israel, and his redeemer the Lord of hosts; I am the first, and I am the last; and beside me there is no God" (Isaiah 44:6).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "I am the Lord: that is my name: and my glory will I not give to another, neither my praise to graven images.
Sing unto the Lord a new song, and his praise from the end of the earth, ye that go down to the sea, and all that is therein; the Isles, and the inhabitants thereof. Let them give glory unto the Lord, and declare his praise in the islands" (Isaiah 42:
8, 10, 12).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook,
"Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy:
"God is Infinite, the only Life, substance, Spirit, or Soul, the only intelligence of the universe, including man. Eye hath neither seen God nor His image and likeness. Neither God nor the perfect man can be discerned by the material senses" (p.
830).

With his glove raised to stop the lion from stepping into the path of the turning automobile, officer Mouse sounds the warning "Watch for turning cars" on the January safety poster issued to thirty-five thousand school rooms in Illinois and Indiana by the Chicago Motor Club.

"Look all ways before crossing," he warns.

This traffic lesson, a part of the concerted safety campaign which the motor club is carrying on in elementary schools of the two states, is portrayed in bright green. Additional questions and problems are sent to teachers which relate to the object lesson enacted on the poster for the pupils to work out, giving them greater understanding of the safety principle in the illustration.

"Pupils of all ages look upon the monthly safety lessons as an interesting game," educators write. "They are genuinely interested in discussion of the posters, and comment on the editorial advice is frequently heard in the school corridors."

The series of safety lessons which are illustrated Mother Goose characters this year are designed to serve as adjuncts to the school safety patrols which the Chicago Motor Club founded in 1922. Since that time, nearly 8,000 lives of children between the ages of 5 to 14 have been saved in the two states. "The work of the patrol boys is more effective because of these monthly lessons because children are made to realize the value of safety habits and appreciate the protection they receive," George Barton, head of the motor club safety department explained.

Depositors Of Closed Banks Paid On Deposits

Edward J. Barret, State Auditor today made public his annual report showing that approximately $7,700,000.00 of frozen deposits was returned to Illinois bank depositors in 1938. Of this total $5,875,000.00 went to depositors in closed banks. One hundred and ninety-five banks throughout the state made payments during the year. The larger part of these payments were made in Illinois outside of Cook County, where 142 closed banks returned $3,119,000.00 to depositors. In Cook County, 53 banks returned $2,755,000.00.

In addition to these payments, 87 open banks made payments on waived deposits totaling $1,834,000.00. In these institutions depositors had waived portions of their claims in order to aid re-opening of the banks following the moratorium.

A NEW SERIAL IN THIS PAPER!

Plan to Abolish Township Duties Perils Home Rule

Editor's note: The following article, discussing the proposals to abolish many functions of the township governments, was written by Mrs. Bernice T. Van der Vries, 968 Pine Street, Winnetka, member of the house of representatives of the Illinois legislature from the seventh senatorial suburban Cook county district.

By BERNICE T. VAN DER VRIES

How much of home rule are suburban citizens of Cook county willing to give up for the sake of alleged efficiency in government that never comes to pass?

In particular do they wish all

Mrs. Van der Vries

their tax assessments to be decided by deputies from the county assessor or would they prefer them made by the local township assessor who is near the job and knows his community?

Would they prefer to have all tax collections made in the jam and confusion of the county building or pay the local township collector?

Would the local taxing boards prefer to have all tax collections go direct to the county treasurer and wait interminably for allocations to them for their expenses, or have the local township collector make distributions to them direct?

Would the taxpayer now contributing his money to poor relief taxes at rates determined separately according to the needs of the respective township relief funds, rather have all the job of the suburban relief thrown into one county agency?

Finally would the officials of suburban public schools prefer to do away with township school treasurers and have all school taxes managed exclusively by the county treasurer?

Wants Public's Opinion

These questions are not asked rhetorically. I should genuinely like to know, as your representative in the Illinois General Assembly, what your opinion is on the rapidly moving current for centralization of government functions into huge units for the sake of political patronage.

In the regular session of the legislature that convenes this week, there will be numerous bills tending both to produce consolidations into greater units and to correct evils already resulting from unwise legislation now in effect that sprang from the general desire for efficient centralization.

State Education Board know of the turmoil in the two recent special sessions of the legislature over the effort to pass legislation for a state board of education. These efforts were defeated primarily because two different administration-sponsored bills were definitely calculated to enforce rather than "induce" consolidation of rural one-teacher school districts.

Only a few people outside of school officials realize the tremendous confusion and budget-padding of school districts because of the direct operation of the Illinois municipal budget law which went into effect last July and which seems definitely to be the forerunner of placing great centralized taxing authority with the Illinois tax commission. Citizens should recall that the entire tax congestion in Cook county during the past ten years followed directly upon the order of that commission to revalue the quadrennial real estate assessment egregious blunder of thinking that of 1927. The commission made the problem of huge and congested Cook county was the same as the sparsely populated counties down state.

Not Only Cause

This was not the only cause of tax trouble. County Judge Jarecki added to the turmoil by permitting a so-called cut of 15 percent on certain types of building assessment which really was no cut at all in net results.

Consider the immense difficulty of administering local schools, villages and parks as a result of the violently fluctuating personal property assessed valuations in the past few years, running all the way from a decrease of 44 percent to an increase of 36 percent this year alone in the suburban townships.

Problems Not Same

The point I am trying to make is that the problems of small downstate communities are not the same as those in suburban Cook county merely by reason of size and congestion. Therefore the problem of home rule is greatly different in the two different state areas.

These questions come up now because of active campaigns already getting under way under the auspices of various groups interested in legislation. Some of the efforts may be only a tempest in a teacup. But over the years there is a constant pressure to consolidate "for the sake of efficiency."

Although there have been measures in the past to wipe out township collectors and assessors, the trouble immediately in sight is in respect to the efficiency of public school operations, principally financial.

Three Documents

And the most pointed reference now is that in respect to abolishing township school treasurers and lodging all their present authority with county treasurers. The movement takes on considerable force because there are at present three important documents on the subject, all sponsored by professional educators:

1. The report of the advisory committee to the Illinois Education commission made public in the summer of 1936 and recommending the abolition of the treasurers because of the high cost of operating the treasurers' offices in sparsely settled communities;

2. A survey by Professor O. F. Weber, of the department of education of the University of Illinois, and a member of the aforesaid committee to the same general purpose, made public during the past few months.

3. A highly statistical survey of the financial condition of Cook county suburban schools recently released by Dr. Ray E. Cheney of River Forest, chairman of the public relations committee of the Lake Shore division of the Illinois Education association (teachers). This document among other things, shows on the face of its data that the township school treasurers in the cost for handling money through some Cook County townships to be excessive and wasteful.

However a sharp controversy has followed immediately upon its publication. Groups of treasurers say the material gives wrong impressions of fact. Many school board members are attacking the inferences of the report as fallacious. The most significant thing about the survey is that the publicity group which prepared and sponsored it is publicizing it about the county.

Immediately the reaction is that, regardless of the fact that this particular group is making no recommendation, township treasurers should be abolished and their work merged with the larger county offices.

Chance for Patronage

Space will not permit here to set forth all phases of this situation. There are those who argue that Cook county might be exempted in any legislation affecting downstate counties. On the other hand, there is the counter-argument that the Cook county political machine in power would be very glad to get additional millions of school money to handle in the manner that it had handled money in the past and also to get many fine additional appointive offices to hand out as patronage to increase political control.

Meanwhile, there are associations among supervisors, assessors, collectors and treasurers which are not asleep on the job, for jobs are at stake. There is a well organized group of suburban and country towns that see the handwriting on the wall in any moves that create greater congestion. Undoubtedly we in the general assembly will be importuned by all these varied interests. But what does the individual citizen think about the whole problem?

Bugle Calls

By Zeb Potter

Mokena is about 1500 miles from the two oceans, either way you take it, east or west. Here we have wrestled our living from the land. There, men battle the sea and the weather for their living.

Let us assume that you are a man forty-five years of age. You have a wife younger than you. Your baby is two years old. You are in charge of a ship. Under you is a crew of seven men.

Strange enough on this particular voyage you take along the wife and baby. But you are a hard sailor. You can discipline a crew. Thus you can keep trouble in the offing.

About three hundred miles west of Gibraltar, your ship is sighted by another vessel. This boat signals you, as is the custom of the sea. But there is no response to their signals from you.

The sea has afforded all the thrills and drama of life. Romance, tragedy, and mystery. Your ship is boarded by the other fellows. They find the sea's set. No evidence of mutiny or violence is visible.

In your cabin, the captain's cabin, your money belt is found. The little pillow on which your daughter's head lay was found, unruffled. Above the pillow was your watch.

The sextant and the chronometer belonging to you were not found. But the ship's log with the final entry "Weather fine, wind light," is left behind, which is unusual on a ghost ship.

In the galley the pots and pans were in their proper place. But a case of canned goods had been opened; the contents taken.

This was the fate of Captain Benjamin Briggs of Marion, Mass., master of the schooner Marie Celeste which cleared from the port of New York for Genoa, Italy, sixty-six years ago.

On the high seas in this mysterious condition, the crew of the British boat Dei Gratia found the Marie

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Kolar are the proud parents of a lovely girl, born at St. Joseph's hospital in Joliet.

Celeste. This ship that was found without the crew following a zig zag course.

This is one of the mysteries of the sea. What happened to Captain Briggs, his wife and child, and the crew of the Marie Celeste? Your guess is as good as mine.

During our last war, a navy collier, the Cyclops, loaded with coal for our fleet in European waters went down off the Azores. No trace of this vessel, not even a floating spar was found to date to my knowledge.

On our ship in the transient service we would discuss the fate of the Cyclops and try to figure out what had happened. But the sea offers with a master hand tragedy, romance, and drama, and mystery that fiction writers cannot equal. Yes, truth is stranger than fiction. That's all this week.

A Telephone Rang in Illinois!

A telephone rang in Illinois, and a mother talked with her son. A farmer heard the price of corn, a merchant wrote an order, cheering news from a hospital eased an anxious mind—a telephone rang... and touched a thousand lives.

Good telephone service is one of the essentials of modern life, and the telephone business is conducted on that understanding. The 23,000 men and women who work for the Illinois Bell Telephone Company do so with a sense of public responsibility. Their tradition is to give you service that is courteous, dependable and cheap in price... in fact, the best telephone service in the world, at the lowest possible cost.

Faith, Not Fortune Teller, Only Human Hope Dr. Maier Says

Fortune tellers are unable to predict even the temperature with accuracy only a day or two in advance, Dr. Walter A. Maier declared today in his coast-to-coast Lutheran Hour broadcast. Asserting that the predictions made by astrologers and crystal gazers a year ago on January 1st, 1938, have proved either false or absurd, Dr. Maier said "it is one of the unexplained mysteries of human prevercity that many people, including, we are told, officials in high governmental and financial circles, pay millions to consult frauds and charlatans but refuse to be guided by the word of God which in multiplied instances has marvelously proved its divine power and truth."

Asserting that there can be only one permanent and trustworthy security for modern life and that this security is not financial, social, cultural, legal, but spiritual, Dr. Maier emphasized that stabilizing influence of personal faith in Jesus Christ. He declared that by building human hopes on this basis "men and women in this beclouded age can have the undying assurance that they are led by divine wisdom, strengthened by Heavenly power and eternally saved by Christ's love."

The New Congress

By

RAYMOND PITCAIRN

Again, as this is written, America looks forward with high hopes to a New Year.

Most of these hopes centre on Recovery—on a return to that spirit of progress and confidence which has been so distinctive a characteristic of our national history.

And Recovery in turn, America realizes, depends largely on the new Congress which our citizens have recently voted into office.

What do the American people ask of that Congress?

Many things that, individually and collectively, can hasten the return of confidence and prosperity.

The unemployed want jobs—productive jobs which bring the satisfaction of a full pay-envelope for a fair week's work.

The farmer, the merchant, the manufacturer, the business man—all want opportunity to resume the productive activities which build up both payrolls and prosperity.

The taxpayer demands relief from the growing burdens which waste and extravagance in government have loaded on his shoulders during recent years, and which threaten to harass him through years to come.

The housewife wants relief from the odd and expensive experiments whose costs she pays in the higher prices of food and clothing and other necessities of the home.

All these demands are reasonable, and possible of fulfillment. But they require a realization on the part of Congress that it is the representative of the people. They require a grim resolution on the part of individual members to serve all the people, rather than a party or a pressure group or a handful of politicians who hold temporary power. It was on the promise to serve the people faithfully that every member of Congress achieved office. On his fulfillment of that promise depends not only his own career, but the welfare of the Nation.

And on the determination of Congress, as a body, to remember and heed that verity, rests America's hopes for a year of true progress and recovery.

World Looks Forward to New Year, Fearing Democracy-Dictator Battle

MUSSOLINI CHAMBERLAIN ROOSEVELT HITLER KAI-SHEK
Will the headlines of 1938 continue to make headlines in 1939?

Europe and Orient Arm Against Possible War, as Totalitarian States Press Their Advantage Against Weaker Lands

By JOSEPH W. LABINE

Father Time closes another volume in his checkered career and the world pauses to conjecture. What will 1939 bring? Can civilization look forward to 12 months of comparative peace after the hectic year just drawing to a close? Or will the trumpets of Mars bleat louder than ever, bringing this battle-scarred globe even nearer to the long-predicted general warfare?

Will new heroes and villains appear to replace names already engraved on the horizon? Or will men still read of Hitler, Mussolini, Chiang Kai-shek, Daladier, Roosevelt and Chamberlain?

From the puzzling maze of headlines blazing across the world at year's end, one safe prediction can be drawn:

The year 1939 will bring unprecedented economic warfare between totalitarian states and democracies, forcing one nation after another into the ultimate political lineup from which they will rise or fall. On one side, the side of authoritarianism, will stand Germany, Italy and Japan, aggressively seeking to extend their power to new frontiers. On the other side will stand France, the United Kingdom and those Western hemisphere nations who will cast their lot with the United States to protect the New World from this new threat to security.

Far East Fears War.

Already the die is being cast. In the Orient, as nowhere else, world powers are consolidating their positions and preparing for a showdown that may come during the next 12 months. Great Britain and the United States, insulted because Japan has discarded the nine-power treaty guaranteeing China's "open door," have come out in the open with financial assistance to sorely pressed Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek.

At the same time China is drawing nearer an alliance with Soviet Russia, Japan's mortal enemy. Recognizing this threat, admitting that conflict with the Soviet must eventually come, Japan has hitched her belt and made increased armament appropriations to cope with the new and greater challenge to her domination over the Far East.

Will this potential dynamite keg explode in 1939? Observers fear it might, and no one dares predict the consequences.

Russia's star may rise or fall in 1939, not only on the strength of her Far Eastern success or failure, but for two other reasons. First, her 20-year program of communication has reached a critical point. Meager reports from Moscow tell of industrial trouble, famine and revolt, providing an internal menace that might prove disastrous if war breaks out.

Germany Looks to the Ukraine.

Second, Russia moves nearer conflict with ambitious Nazi Germany. One of the most important planks in Chancellor Adolf Hitler's program is the creation of a Ukrainian republic, to be carved out of the vast expanse of southwestern Russia and southeastern Poland. It is freely predicted that Germany will open this campaign in the spring. Already her propaganda agents are working in the Ukraine and daily programs in the Ukrainian language are broadcast from Vienna. Hitler's intentions became clear when he refused to give Hungary and Poland a common border at the expense of Czechoslovakia, because he wanted to protect his "path to the east" through the latter state.

This is but one of Hitler's ambitions for 1939. The other is annexation of Memel, on the east shore of the Baltic sea, from Lithuania. Although Der Fuehrer promised at Munich that he had no more territorial ambitions in Europe, a situation is being arranged very conveniently whereby the Reich will be "forced" to annex the Nazified Memelites, whose land is contiguous to East Prussia.

Another German ambition is domination of the Balkans. Already such states as Yugo-Slavia, Rumania, Bulgaria and Hungary have fallen into the German sphere of influence, and this program will be intensified in 1939.

France May Capitulate.

Meanwhile, at the other end of the Rome-Berlin axis, Italy's Premier Benito Mussolini looks for the new year to bring him new territories in the Mediterranean. Though he has "demanded" that France give him Tunisia, Corsica, Savoy and Nice, he is expected to settle for much less. But France will undoubtedly make some concessions in 1939, principally providing for joint French-British-Italian control over the Suez canal and giving Ethiopia an outlet to the sea through Djibouti.

This particular problem is expected to draw attention during January, when England's Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain and Foreign Secretary Viscount Halifax visit Mussolini in Rome. France is Great Britain's closest ally, and since Chamberlain has taken the lead in the 1938 program of "appeasing" dictators, he is expected to arrange a settlement of the Franco-Italian problem.

In Spain, where the civil war is now more than two years old, a settlement is expected during 1939. Loyalists, who have lost ground steadily, will probably capitulate to Rebel Generalissimo Francisco Franco. Not only does Franco have the active support of Germany and Italy, but also of the strong Spanish royalist faction. He has just restored citizenship and properties taken from ex-King Alfonso, and Prince Juan is expected one day to become a puppet monarch with Franco as premier.

Democracies on Guard.

Dictators cannot stand still, and Hitler and Mussolini must either rise to new glories or fall in the estimation of their subjects. That is why no sane European observer can predict a cessation of the diplomatic conflict now waging. If Great Britain and France expected their appeasement policy to bring a permanent European peace out of the chaos of 1938, Italy and Germany are now showing there is no such thing as permanent appeasement. Therefore the democracies are now stiffening their attitudes.

Many are the commentators who predict general European conflict early in 1939. Sir Oswald Pirow, defense minister for the Union of South Africa, made such a statement after completing a discouraging tour of continental capitals.

Meanwhile the Western hemisphere cannot ignore the threat of totalitarian propaganda. At the Pan-American conference in Lima, Peru, the United States joined with other New World nations in a program to keep Italy, Germany and Japan in check. How well the plan will succeed is problematical, since it is based on nothing more concrete than well-intentioned resolutions. But the United States has apparently convinced those South American nations who fear "dollar imperialism" that Uncle Sam has good intentions.

Trade Battle Predicted.

This is the background for 1939's battle of democracy versus totalitarianism. The battle itself will probably be an international trade war, since Nazi-Fascist states depend on foreign trade to expand their political domination. But as Germany's export-import activity grows greater, so does that of the United Kingdom, whose reciprocal trade treaty with the United States goes into effect this year.

From behind the scenes in every nation will come the clatter of steel against steel as men forge the weapons of defense and aggression—battleships, tanks, airplanes and cannon. Never since the World War have armament appropriations been so large. Not the least of these is our own United States, which may embark on a military-naval program plus industrial mobilization—providing congress provides the cash.

So there is a rumbling of cannons and a raucous babble of propaganda to mingle with this season's New Year's celebration. Will war emerge, or will common sense prevail? Only the infant 1939 can tell, and he's too young to speak!

General Johnson stirs up Washington by his advocacy of Garner for President . . . Roper leaves a tough spot and enigma for Washington . . . No more foreign loans will be the slogan this winter . . . Boost Taft for finance committee.

WASHINGTON.—Daniel C. Roper leaves a tough spot and an enigma for Washington. The answer to the enigma may come before very long and it will be worth studying. Actually that answer will forecast the future not only with respect to the attitude the administration will take towards business, but even as to the probability of a third term for President Roosevelt.

It so happened that the final forcing out of Roper came just after publication of a magazine article by Gen. Hugh S. Johnson which discussed the third term possibility, and predicted that Roosevelt would turn a little to the right in order to make certain his re-nomination and re-election.

This Johnson article aroused no end of bitter comment in Washington, not only because of his frank characterization of many of the New Dealers as "crackpots" but because of his prediction that an overwhelming flood of returning prosperity would come within three weeks after John Nance Garner became President!

The New Dealers of course do not concede that an administration such as Garner would conduct would result in prosperity. But they object even more violently to the idea of Garner for President. Obviously they do not want any such "exodus of crackpots" as Johnson predicts would occur if Garner became President. They would much rather have an exodus of the Garners.

Department of Commerce Does Not Regulate Business

In the policies to be carried on by the new secretary of commerce there is not so much interest as one might think. Actually there are other branches of the government which are of much more interest to business. For example, the trust-busting division of the department of justice. For example, the securities and exchange commission. For example, the ICC, the federal trade commission, the WPA, the PWA, yes, even the TVA.

Actually the department of commerce is not a menace to business. It does not regulate business. It does not decide on the taxes that business will have to pay. It makes many studies and gathers a lot of data which is of value to business, especially on exports and imports. But even on that it is of nothing like the importance to business that the tariff commission is, and does not compare to the reciprocal trade treaty negotiating division of the state department.

But nevertheless the appointment of a secretary of commerce is of enormous importance, despite the comparatively drab and workaday functions of the department he will head. Not by any means because of the actual acts that the secretary of commerce will perform, but because his mere selection is a hint as to the attitude of the President.

So it makes a lot of difference whether the post is filled by a man whom business men regard as a witch burner, or whether the appointment goes to a man to whom business generally feels friendly.

No More Foreign Loans

Will Be Slogan This Winter

No more foreign loans will be the slogan on Capitol Hill this winter. Congress is all set to be isolationist, as far as Europe is concerned. It is all set to be extremely friendly to the other countries of this hemisphere. It would even be willing to fight to prevent foreign aggression south of the Rio Grande. But it is not willing to risk another dollar of taxpayers' money on loans to any foreign government, or to individuals in any foreign country, either for trade development—the idea Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau Jr. is toying with—or for building up their own national defense.

This last idea seems to be strong in Lima, where the Latin-American countries that favor the new version of the Monroe Doctrine, which might now be called a mutual defensive alliance, are rather intrigued with playing their own part. That part of course, as far as one can learn here, to be financed from Washington.

Loans for trade development were always popular in New York and in big manufacturing communities. There is a selfish interest as big as a barn door to explain it. Much of the 1927, 1928 and early 1929 prosperity was built on foreign loans. Out in the country, if one is to believe returning congressmen, there is a very different attitude. There is a very keen recollection of the foreign bonds that defaulted, and there is considerable resentment against those the folks out in the country hold responsible.

In fact, this was one of the highly significant causes of the tremendous flop in the prestige of Herbert Hoover. The casual observer thinks of American investors as some restricted class living mostly in old eastern cities. Let's look at a particular instance involving these defaulted foreign bonds.

Bank Depositors Stung by Defaulted Foreign Bonds

It so happened that the city of Pocatello, Idaho, had a considerable deposit in a local bank. Under the law, the city's funds were protected more rigorously than the deposits of ordinary citizens. It was required that sound bonds be earmarked in the bank's vault as a special guarantee.

Came the bank holiday and the city officials wanted to know about the city funds.

"Where are the bonds protecting them?" they demanded.

The bank officials sadly showed the city officials just what they had done. They had earmarked certain bonds of South American republics as being the collateral of the city deposits.

"But why should you have treated us like this?" the city officials protested. "Why did you put worthless bonds behind our deposits?"

The bankers explained that, on the advice of federal bank examiners, the bank had bought these foreign bonds. Not only that, they had sold, at a loss, some irrigation bonds which the bank examiners seemed to think nothing of. The bank examiners had lists of bonds they considered good, and these foreign bonds were on it.

This was not an isolated instance. Depositors all over the country, ranging down to obscure hamlets, were penalized by this craze of the Washington government to loan money abroad. The point is that the folks knew it then, and remember it now. And their congressmen know all about it.

Want Senator-Elect Taft on Senate Finance Committee

A quiet campaign is under way to make Senator-elect Robert A. Taft a member of the senate finance committee. In many ways the finance committee is the most important in the senate. It decides on all tax questions and handles all tariff bills.

Normally a freshman senator does not aspire so high. If he makes this committee, or appropriations, or foreign relations in his first six-year term, he thinks he has made real progress. To make the Taft ambition all the tougher, it so happens that no Republican member of the finance committee fell by the wayside this year. As a matter of fact only one of them was up this year. That was James J. Davis of Pennsylvania, who won both his re-nomination and re-election fights handsily.

Other Republican members of the committee are Arthur Capper of Kansas, Arthur H. Vandenberg of Michigan and John G. Townsend of Delaware. Sen. Robert M. La Follette of Wisconsin is also a member, but is classified as a Progressive instead of as a Republican.

In the last session there were 16 Democrats on this committee, only four Republicans, and one Progressive. It remains to be seen what concessions will be made to the Republicans in committee assignments due to their increased strength. Having the majority, the Democrats can do anything they please. But the probability is that the Republicans will get at least two more members of this committee.

There are eight new Republican senators, and it just so happens that two of them replace Democratic members of the committee.

Democratic Losers Are Replaced by Republicans

Taft, replacing Sen. Robert J. Buckley, is one of these. The other vacancy was caused by the defeat of Sen. Augustine Lonergan of Connecticut. Both states have been conceded almost a vested interest in the finance committee, due to the days when the most important function of this committee was framing tariff bills, as both states rank high in their manufacturing interest and hence are vitally interested in the protective tariff.

Other states sending Republican senators to replace Democrats are New Jersey, New Hampshire, Wisconsin, South Dakota, Kansas and Oregon. Wisconsin can be eliminated as far as the Taft candidacy for the finance committee is concerned because it already has one member of the committee in La Follette. New Jersey, which is sending Warren Barbour back to the upper house, is normally considered as ranking high in its claims to a voice in the finance committee, but nothing like so high as Ohio, and there is no word that Barbour is making a bid for the place.

Obviously the other states are not so much entitled to consideration because of population, wealth or manufacturing interest as Ohio. Kansas already has a Republican member of the committee, Arthur Capper.

Navy Assembles in Atlantic For Huge Battle Maneuvers

This week a steady parade of Uncle Sam's "battlegroups" begins moving eastward through the Panama canal, bound for the fleet's first Atlantic maneuvers since 1934, and the second largest gathering of ships and men ever held under the American flag.

From now until next spring, 140 combatant ships plus auxiliary vessels, accommodating a total of 60,000 men, will work on "Fleet Problem No. 20," directed by Admiral Claude O. Bloch, commander-in-chief of naval forces. Ships will range up and down the coast from Cuba to Brazil. Divided into two units, the problem will find a "black fleet" defending the coast against a "white fleet" which is attempting to establish a base on that coast.

The 140 combatant ships include battleships, cruisers, aircraft carriers, destroyers, submarines and 600 airplanes, including all types of fighting, scouting and observation planes.

Following maneuvers, the fleet will meet in the vicinity of Guatamano to practice gunnery. Later ships will be sent north to visit the New York world's fair.

Though no public pronouncement has been made, it is quite obvious that the Atlantic maneuvers are destined as protection for Uncle Sam against any possible invasion from Europe, in accordance with President Roosevelt's proposal for United States initiative in a program to protect the entire Western hemisphere.

Admiral Claude Bloch, commander-in-chief of the United States naval forces, who is in direct charge of the Atlantic maneuvers.

Coming immediately after the Pan-American conference at Lima, when European attention is focused on New World solidarity efforts, the maneuvers will serve as a warning that the United States will tolerate no European aggression in South America.

Plight of European Jews Emphasizes Need of Haven

Tanganyika Most Frequently Mentioned Refuge for Persecuted Jews

Prepared by National Geographic Society,
Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

The plight of Jews in Europe has brought into the news spotlight many possible havens. Thus far, Tanganyika, a former German colony in Africa (now British), has been most frequently mentioned. In addition, however, suggested places of refuge include Kenya and Northern Rhodesia, British African colonies; Madagascar, French-owned island off south-east Africa; British Guiana on the northern coast of South America; and Melville Island, off northwestern Australia.

Tanganyika, spreading over more than 366,000 square miles of East Africa, was the lion's share of the former German East Africa divides after the World war, and now is an important link in the chain of "British pink" that spreads uninterrupted from the Mediterranean to the Cape of Good Hope.

Vast forests that cover thousands of square miles of the mandated area are the basis of a profitable lumber industry. Then there are extensive open areas used as farm lands where sisal cotton, coffee, ground-nuts, and grain are grown for domestic needs, and for export. Other open country supports 5,000,000 cattle, more than half as many sheep and upwards of 300,000 goats. There are known deposits of gold, mica, tin and diamonds but mineral resources have not been extensively worked.

Dar es Salaam, the chief port and largest city in the old German colony, is in telegraphic communication with many inland towns and villages, and with the adjoining British colonies, Nyasaland, Kenya, Uganda, and Northern Rhodesia.

Kenya Ruled by England.

Kenya, northern neighbor of Tanganyika, looks small on the map of vast Africa, but it is actually larger than France.

It is a land of lakes that have no outlet, deserts where it sometimes does not rain for a year or more at a time, fertile, well-watered farm lands, elephants that climb mountains, and tribes where a wife can be bought for a small amount of grain or coffee.

England rules Kenya, but she pays rent for part of it. A strip 10 miles wide along more than half its Indian ocean coast, and some islands off shore, are leased from the sultan of Zanzibar. England exercises a protectorate over this territory, but the rest of Kenya is a British crown colony.

Forming the boundary of Kenya's southwest corner is huge Lake Victoria, second largest fresh water lake in the world. It is the chief source of the White Nile.

More than 3,000,000 people live in Kenya. Among them are 17,000 Europeans, 38,000 Asiatics, and 11,000 Arabs.

Most of Northern Rhodesia occupies the central plateau of Africa. Only a small area is less than 3,000 feet above sea level while much of it is above 5,000 feet.

Mineral resources of Northern Rhodesia are copper, lead and zinc. The natives have not been apt students of agriculture.

Today there are in the colony about 10,000 white men. Most of the whites live in the southeast near the railroad which links important population centers of the Belgian Congo, Northern and Southern Rhodesia, and South Africa.

Communications Are Poor.

Lack of communications has been one of the colony's chief drawbacks. Until more railroads and modern highways streak the colony, native porters and canoes will be Northern Rhodesia's chief burden bearers.

Madagascar with 241,000 square miles outranked in area among the islands of the world only by New Guinea, Borneo and Greenland. A high, barren plateau, edged with cliffs, rises in the central part of the island. Towering above the plateau are huge mountain masses.

Besides rice and coffee Madagascar produces vanilla, cocoa, spices, rubber, sugar, millet, maize, cotton, and tobacco, as well as cattle, pigs, sheep and goats. But rice is the staple crop.

Diego-Suarez, which has one of the finest natural harbors in the world, serves as French naval base and chief commercial port of the island.

The native tribes (Malagasy) are not related in any way to African races, but seem to be derived from Melanesian and Malayo-Polynesian stock.

Madagascar's climate varies according to altitude. The coastal lands are hot and unhealthy, but towns on the high plateau have cool air and moderate temperatures. The country in the extreme south is semi-arid and rather like the American Southwest.

British Guiana has a total area larger than England, Scotland, and Wales together. Yet the population is little more than 300,000, or about two people to a square mile, except in the cities. (In contrast, Germany has 366 people per square mile) Georgetown, the capital, accounts for one-fifth of the entire colony's inhabitants.

Gold, Diamonds Abound.

Over two million ounces of gold and two million carats of diamonds have been brought out of British Guiana's jungle hinterland. Exports of bauxite ore for aluminum now rival the value of sugar exports. But almost nothing has been done with reported deposits of manganese ore, oil, and mica, because the rivers—only lines of communication into the mountains of the interior—are interrupted by a sudden wall-like edge of the interior plateau, over which plunge some of the highest and most spectacular waterfalls in the world.

Melville island, which could accommodate some 25,000 Jewish families, is a rough half-moon of land across a narrow channel from Australia's chief northern port of Darwin.

Melville island, with an abundant supply of fresh water, was chosen as the site of the first colony of northern Australia. The natives are a healthy, sturdy people who live in crude huts made of gum bark.

The island is plentifully supplied by a wealth of timber. From this bark are also made canoes, baskets, and various objects for housekeeping and ceremonial use. It even serves as a temporary burial mound before the customary grave posts are set up, and as a patch of modesty in the "fig-leaf" costume of native women.

To capable fishermen and hunters, the island offers an abundance of natural food in jungle fruit and game, in turtle eggs, crabs, lizards—and the popular dugong, or "sea cow," a huge blubbery creature.

Although now uncultivated, the fertile soil of Melville island is well adapted to the growth of such tropical products as coconuts, rubber, and cotton. Wild herds of buffalo still roam the watered plains, also suitable for raising domestic stock.

Bad Company

By CARLTON JAMES

INSPECTOR WARREN carefully examined the dead man where he lay in the bed, and then turned to the girl. She was a pretty girl, dark, with blue eyes. Just now the eyes held a look of fright. They were wide and staring. She stood near the door watching the officer intently. Something vaguely familiar about her features caused him to hesitate. He frowned, trying to remember. Then suddenly it came. "I guess you're the girl I've seen in company with Blackie Gaskill. Isn't that right?"

She seemed a little bewildered at the question. "Why, yes—that is—Blackie and I are engaged."

"That's bad, Miss Hartley. Bad. Sometimes a person—quite often, in fact—is judged by the company he—or shall we say she—keeps."

Instant anger lighted the girl's eyes. Her lips were white. "Do you mean to insinuate—"

But Warren had turned and was studying the articles on a bedside table. There were a variety of medicine bottles, a tumbler, spoon, a lamp, a clock with illuminated figures, and a book. He turned to face the girl once more.

"Your uncle—" he indicated the bed with a slight tilt of his head—"your uncle was paralyzed, wasn't he? A shock victim?"

"Yes. He had lost the use of his left side completely. Fortunately his right arm was unaffected, though he couldn't move more than to hold a book in his right hand."

The officer frowned. "Let's see now. The doctor said he died from an overdose of medicine. When could he have taken that medicine, Miss Hartley?"

"Why probably last night. I was out for a short time. I'd been here with him all day, and wanted a breath of air." Her voice had an apologetic note. "He seemed contented enough. He was reading when I left. And when I came in he'd turned off his light and gone to sleep. It wasn't until this morning that I found him—" She shrank from uttering the word.

Warren shook his head sadly. "There are still some things I can't seem to puzzle out." He looked up suddenly, and saw that the eagerness had vanished from the girl's eyes. Something in the inspector's tone had caused the color to drain from her cheeks. "Of course," Warren was saying, "you'll inherit his entire fortune? You're his only heir?"

"I hardly see what that has to do with uncle's death. If you're through with your investigation, inspector, I wish you'd go."

But Warren seemed scarcely to hear. "A million dollars," he mused, as if to himself. "Perhaps more. Blackie would like that. Now wouldn't he though?"

The girl suddenly stamped her foot indignantly, yet behind that mask of dignity Warren discerned another emotion—fear.

"Inspector Warren, if you're insinuating that Blackie—that I—" She paused, confused.

"If Blackie, if you?" questioned Warren.

The girl placed both hands to her head, as if striving to restrain herself. "Oh, what is it you can't understand? What is it? Can't you see that Uncle's death has unstrung me? That in itself is enough, without having to listen to your prattle."

"Prattle?" said Warren mildly. "Prattle?" And then his voice took on a sterner note. "Would it be prattle if I accused you of murdering your uncle, Miss Hartley?"

The girl's face went chalk white. She swayed against the door frame. "Murdered?" she whispered. "Murdered! Me? Not—not me!"

"Blackie might have had something to do with it," Warren agreed. "He probably thought up the idea, and you carried it out. That's like Blackie. He lets others do the dirty work."

"But—but—how do you—that is, why do you say such things? Why? Why?" Her voice faltered, and Warren said sternly:

"You might as well make a clean breast of it, Miss Hartley. I know you killed him!"

"You know?" She stared at him incredulously. "How?"

"Why, because someone must have given him that medicine. And who, besides yourself, is there here to do that?"

"But I've already told you I was out. I can prove it. I was at a dance with Blackie. Uncle took the medicine himself while I was gone."

"But that's absurd, Miss Hartley. Absurd. Unfortunately Blackie didn't warn you. But you see, this bedstead is on the left side of the bed. It would have been impossible for your uncle, paralyzed as he was, to reach over with his right hand, pour out the medicine himself, drink it, switch off the light and lie back to die. Oh, that would have been impossible, Miss Hartley. It's a shame Blackie wasn't here to arrange things for you. He—"

Warren broke off abruptly and hurried across the room. The girl, with a little cry of terror and misery collapsed near the door there.

Warren stood over her a minute, and sadly shook his head. "Bad company," he said. "You can usually judge a person by the company he—or she—keeps."

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Discusses the Diet of Expectant Mother. Some General Rules for Wise Eating at This Important Time

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

DISTINGUISHED writers and sociologists, both here and abroad, have concerned themselves in recent years with the writing of a Children's Charter and a Baby's Bill of Rights. These efforts are commendable because they demonstrate a forward-looking attitude . . . a genuine attempt to better the lot of the next generation. Indeed, they represent a concerted effort to do for children in general what mothers have always tried to do individually for their own children.

Building Materials
It is important to pay special attention to the amount and kind of protein that is eaten, since over the entire period the baby grows tremendously, even though almost half of the weight of the new-born child is added during the final two months before birth.

Recent investigations also indicate that the prospective mother is best able to maintain her nutritional reserve if the amount of protein in her diet is carefully calculated. It is desirable likewise that the protein be of the highest quality.

Milk is even more important in the diet of the expectant mother than in that of other adults—not only for its protein, but because of its minerals and vitamins. As a rule, the expectant mother should take a quart of milk a day, whereas the usual diet for adults calls for a pint of milk daily.

Minerals and Vitamins
In addition to requiring protein to help build tissue for her baby, the expectant mother must have a generous amount of minerals. Calcium and phosphorus are required especially for the formation of the baby's bones and teeth. Construction begins on all the teeth before birth, and at birth, all 20 of the first set are completely calcified within the jaw.

Besides providing the necessary minerals to help construct bones and teeth, it is also important to include in the prospective mother's diet an adequate supply of vitamins. Vitamin D is essential if the calcium and phosphorus are to be utilized properly, and it has

Building Better Babies
Every expectant mother should be under the care of a physician, and usually he gives specific advice concerning the foods that may be eaten and those that might better be avoided. But every woman will be a better mother if she understands something of the functions and fate of foods, with particular reference to this period.

Don't Overeat
Generally speaking, the same foods that are required for a well-balanced diet under ordinary circumstances are the ones that will best serve the needs of mother and child during the months before a baby is born. There are, however, certain modifications of the diet that may well be taken into consideration.

First, a word about the amount of food consumed: It is not necessary to eat more than is required to satisfy the normal appetite, in the belief that large quantities of additional food are needed. Nutritionists have demonstrated that the energy requirements of the expectant mother increase only during the last three months of gestation. Thus, it is not necessary to increase the caloric intake for the first few months, though toward the end of the period a gradual increase in caloric intake may be made under the direction of the physician. It is advisable, however, to emphasize that the character of the addition

It is advisable, however, to emphasize that the character of the addition also been indicated that vitamins A and C are likewise most important at this time.

The mineral iron is also required in significant amounts and this may well be obtained from eggs, dried fruits, whole grain cereals and green leafy vegetables. It has been found that the thyroid gland is unusually active in the expectant mother. And in those sections of the country where the drinking water and soil are deficient in iodine, physicians frequently recommend the use of some food such as iodized salt.

Adequate Bulk or Cellulose

It is most desirable that enough bulky foods be included in the diet to help maintain regular health habits.

This requirement should be taken care of automatically if generous amounts of fruits, vegetables and whole grain cereals are consumed. For in addition to their minerals and vitamins, all these foods likewise supply bulk which aids in promoting regularity.

The wide use of fruits and vegetables will also help to build up a liberal alkaline reserve, which helps to safeguard health during the period of gestation.

If all these factors are taken into consideration, the expectant mother will not only help to preserve her own health, but will take constructive measures to give her baby the blessings of a sound start in life. Then as the healthy, contented infant grows into the healthy, happy, active toddler, and later becomes the healthy, well-adjusted school boy, the mother can indeed be proud of her handiwork!

Questions Answered

Miss E. D. M.—Yes, in most of the foods containing vitamin G, this vitamin is associated with vitamin B. White of egg is the only food in which it is definitely known to date that vitamin G occurs without vitamin B.

Mrs. S. D. L.—It is true that nuts furnish protein similar in quantity to that found in cream and top milk. Nutritionists do not agree, however, that the protein is the complete equal of milk protein in quality.

HOW to SEW

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

THINGS that will have a ready sale at a fair or church bazaar; things that may be made quickly from odds and ends of material on hand; colorful, useful things for gifts—these are the requests that come in the mail.

Here is another suggestion that has stood the test of practical use—a flat case that holds six pairs of stockings. What a relief not to have them all mixed up with underwear and other things in dresser drawers.

This case may be made quickly on the sewing machine. A piece of cretonne or bright ticking or other cotton material of the dimensions given here, and about two yards of contrasting bias binding are the materials needed. The diagrams given here in the sketch, explain each step in cutting and making the case.

If a more elaborate case is desired, silk may be used with ribbon for the bindings. A quilted silk case of this type would make an exquisite gift. Machine quilting may be used for this purpose.

Be sure to clip and save these lessons as they are not in either Book 1 or 2. These books are full of still other useful ideas, with complete cutting and sewing directions for each item clearly illustrated. They save the price of many patterns and you will use them constantly for references and inspiration.

NOTE: Mrs. Spears' Book 2—Gifts, Novelties and Embroidery, has helped thousands of women to use odds and ends of materials and their spare time to make things to sell and to use. Book 1—SEWING, for the Home Decorator, is full of inspiration for every homemaker. These books make delightful gifts. Mrs. Spears will autograph them on request. Books are 25 cents each. Crazy-patch quilt leaflet is included free with every order for both books. Address Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.

POINT OF VIEW

Low viewpoint, as here, gives a picture one aspect. High viewpoint produces a different picture. Try both.

MANY things go into the making of an artistic, appealing picture—and not the least important is the point of view.

In fact, the viewpoint determines the type of picture you get. Consider a picture of a person out of doors. Stand back thirty feet to take the picture, and you get a landscape view with a figure in the foreground. Stand only a few feet from the subject, and you get an informal portrait with the minimum of background. In other words, if you want to feature the person—get close to your subject. If it's the landscape you want—stand back.

Angle shots are unusual and attract attention. Shoot from an elevation, and you get a "bird's-eye" view of your subject. Shoot from below and you get a "worm's-eye" view. The resulting pictures of the same subject from the low and high viewpoints will be quite different and they will lend variety to your snapshot collection.

For example, the picture above was snapped from the beach below the diving board. If the snapshot had been perched aloft in the diving tower, with his camera pointed downward toward the pair on the springboard, his picture would have been quite different—entirely because of the difference in viewpoint.

In this picture, a K-2 filter was used on the camera lens to darken the sky and emphasize the clouds. Ordinarily, the filter would have necessitated increased exposure, but here the beach reflected so much light that 1/50 second at f.8 was correct. Had the picture been taken from a high viewpoint, with camera pointed down toward the water, no filter would have been used, because the water photographs dark without it.

Next time you're taking pictures—and today is as good a time as any—try snapping the same subject from several viewpoints, high, low, close-up, and distant. Then compare the pictures. You'll readily see how viewpoint helps you to control the arrangement of your pictures. You can simplify backgrounds, eliminate undesirable parts of a scene, make all sorts of changes—all by moving left or right, forward or backward.

This is one sure road to better pictures—study different viewpoints; choose the best one to tell your story—then shoot.

ONE of the happiest ways of introducing vistas into a room that looks out on blank walls or has insufficient windows is by use of a photo mural behind polished plate glass.

Illustrated is a corner of a room which had only one window in it and that with an unattractive view. The owner of this room wisely decided on a photo mural treatment, choosing for a mural a picture which he himself had taken on a trip to Florida. The square corner of the room was eliminated with use of wall boards and to these the photo mural, suggesting wide reaches of sky and waving palms, was applied. Then peach plate glass was installed to give the feeling of a large window. The glass not only added to the beauty of the photo mural but also picked up reflections of light, giving the whole room a feeling of spaciousness and airiness that had previously been lacking.

With the addition of a comfortable sectional divan and end tables with compartments for books beneath the window, a commonplace room was transformed into one that became livable, charming and which invariably aroused enthusiastic comment on the part of the owner's friends.
